Physical comedy group Parallel Exit brings two shows, workshop to BlackRock

Hey, physical comedy is a lot harder than it looks. Comedian Chevy Chase used it for his impersonation of Gerald Ford in "Saturday Night Live," and even the great Dick Van Dyke used a bit for the "Dick Van Dyke Show." Others, such as Charlie Chaplin and Buster Keaton were well known for their sthick. Just because you fall, doesn't mean people are going to laugh, though.

OK, well, not in your face at least. They're probably laughing on the inside ... unless it's your family who sees you fall, then

The New York City physical comedy group Parallel Exit, will bring their show "Exit Stage Left," to the BlackRock Center for the Arts for two shows on Saturday. The vaudevillian show is appropriate for all audiences.

The company members will lead a physical comedy workshop at 10 a.m., ideal for physical performers, actors, etc. The workshop is free, but a reservation is required.

Tickets for each show are $15-$22. For more information, visit blackrockcenter.org or call 240-912-1058.
